ARCHITECTURE

Architecture Flow from User Browser to Nginx Web Server

The architecture follows a straightforward path for incoming traffic. A user's browser sends a request through the GCP VPC Firewall, which routes it to an e2-micro VM running Debian Linux, where Nginx handles the request and serves web pages.

End-to-End Flow Summary: External HTTP traffic on Port 80 is authorized at the GCP network perimeter before entering the Linux OS environment and being processed by Nginx.